Book by Patrick, Randal

White Trash In A Trailer Park is a leaping scene-rich motion picture of a book... the quintessential Southern story. -- Terry Kay, author of "To Dance with the white dog, Shadow Song, The Runaway" A rich array of gritty characters who are both resolute and resigned to making the most of their lives propped up on cinder blocks. -- The Tennessean, June 97 Patrick writes with an uncanny ability to listen and pass on to readers the language and mores of the new South. (The Southern Scene, Nov. 97 -- The Southern Scene, Nov. 97 Recalls Erskine Caldwell's 'God's Little Acre.' -- The Rockdale Citizen, June 1997 Without a doubt the best Trailer Park novel ever wrote and I done read 'em all. -- Bubba Skynyrd, Country's most wanted Sony Fox Warner Radio From the Publisher Actor, Author, Screenwriter, Randal Patrick is one of the new southern writers who has managed to hang on to the voice of the old south. Often compared to Erskine Caldwell, Willie Morris and Barry Hannah, Patrick has the that unique ability to keep you thinking about the characters long after you have finished the book. From the Back Cover Randal Patrick paints a unique Southern canvas with this story of sixteen year old Becky Sewell as she deal with teenage pregnancy, passive child abuse, peer preasure and the emotional struggle of coming of age in the rural south. Using language as his brush, he colors the pages with humor, warmth, abd sensitivity as he exposes the lives, loves and losses of the famiies that inhabit Captian's Point trailer Park. The novel plunges the reader into the heart of rural America. If you've never visited the South, you'll swear you have been there after you read this book.
